LEADERSHIP WEEK 1

My personal leadership philosophy is built on the understanding that true leadership is not merely about holding a position of authority, but about taking the responsibility to inspire and bring out the best in others. I lean heavily toward a blend of servant and transformational leadership styles. I believe in prioritizing the well-being and personal growth of my team while fostering a shared sense of purpose and enthusiasm to achieve our common goals.

This philosophy is deeply rooted in my reflection on past experiences. In the past, I have worked in environments driven by autocratic leaders, where decision-making was entirely centralized and strict compliance was demanded. I noticed firsthand how this approach led to low team morale, limited creativity, and a heavy dependence on the leader's direct authority. Conversely, when I experienced democratic leadership that encouraged team participation and valued collaborative input, I felt significantly more engaged and motivated to contribute innovative ideas.

Looking toward the future, my aspiration is to continuously align my core values with my daily leadership actions. I aim to cultivate a supportive environment built on trust, empathy, and continuous learning. By leading with humility and acting as a facilitator rather than a dictator, I plan to guide my team through future challenges effectively while ensuring that we all grow both professionally and personally.
